THE COMPONENTS OF A MEANINGFUL MEALTIME

1 MEANINGFUL MEALTIMES ARE SCHEDULED

Intentionally spending time with others around the table rarely happens by accident. Get out your calendar, make a plan, and stick with it. You can do this!

If you live alone, this is still for you! Find others around you who would benefit from these shared mealtimes and invite them to join you in the challenge. Likewise, if you eat often with those in your household, consider inviting someone who lives alone to join your table during the challenge.

2 MEANINGFUL MEALTIMES ARE SPECIAL

Don't mistake the word "special" for "formal," and get intimidated by the challenge. Most of us eat several times a day. Just share those meals with others! They could be at home or at a restaurant, fast food or slow food, and they could be breakfast, lunch, or dinner.

To make meaningful mealtimes special, the most important task is turning off the distractions. Put the mobile devices away, turn off the TV, and enjoy the conversation!

For meals you share with people outside your circle, you can make them special by asking the person to share a part of their own story. No other agenda is really necessary. Getting to know one another will be a gift to both of you!

3 MEANINGFUL MEALTIMES ARE SPIRITUAL

You'll be surprised how this component will happen naturally if you'll pay attention to the other two! There doesn't have to be any sort of lesson taught in order for the time to be spiritual. Begin with a prayer for one another and engage in conversation that expresses your awareness of God's goodness and presence.
